URGENT: Warehouse B Floor Issues

I was reviewing our safety dashboard this morning, and a specific trend caught my eye that I couldn't ignore. Over the last seven days, Warehouse B has reported a significant spike in "Near Miss" incidents related to slips and trips. While thankfully no one has been seriously hurt yet, the data is telling us that it is only a matter of time unless we step in right now.

I know how hard everyone is pushing to meet our mid-month targets, but I want to be clear: No shipment is worth a broken bone or a head injury. We've had more wet weather lately, and the loading bays are holding onto moisture longer than usual. We need to reset our focus on housekeeping immediately.

What we need to do right now:

- Dry Zones are a Must: If you see a puddle or a damp patch near the bay doors, please don't walk past it. Use the floor squeegees or place a "Wet Floor" sign immediately.
- Clear the Path: We've noticed pallets creeping into the main walking aisles. Let's keep those yellow lines clear so no one trips while their hands are full.
- Check Your Soles: Please take a second to ensure your safety boots aren't worn down. If your tread is gone, come see me—we will get you a replacement pair today.
- Slow Down Near Corners: Forklift drivers and foot traffic are converging in the North corridor. Let's make a conscious effort to take those corners wide and slow.

If you feel like a specific area in Warehouse B is a "disaster waiting to happen," please come talk to me directly. You aren't "reporting" a person; you are protecting a teammate. Let's get through the rest of this week with zero injuries.

Stay safe,
Kind regards,
